

MOZAMBIQUE

Community Development in Mozambique Summer I 2019

PROGRAM DESCRIPTION

This faculty-led, interdisciplinary service project allows students from a variety of disciplines to work together at a sustainable poultry business in Nampula, Mozambique. Students work in teams to complete a project based on academic discipline and interests. Through this program, students learn first-hand the challenges of establishing a sustainable business in a developing environment, and how to creatively apply their skills to improve the business. This offers tremendous capacity for not only experiential learning, but also leadership and personal growth.

MEET PREVIOUS STUDENTS

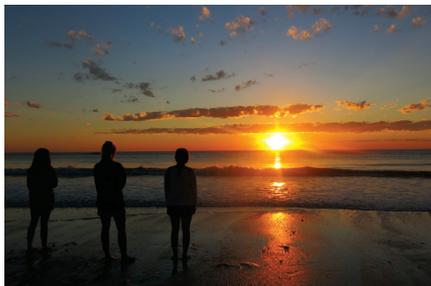

“Going to Mozambique was one of the most raw experiences I have ever had. The people are authentic and courageous. I learned more in three weeks in Mozambique than I would in three months in America. I would definitely go again if I had the opportunity.”
~Mary Menz, 2018 participant

“Mozambique was a life-changing experience all around. Not only are you getting class credit, but you are growing as a person.”
~Mallory Winburn, 2018 participant

“This experience helped me to understand the importance of poultry production worldwide. The world population is growing constantly, and in developing countries like Mozambique an egg consumed per day makes a big difference in their diet. This experience has inspired me to apply to graduate school and start my master’s degree in poultry science next year.”

OPPORTUNITY

By participating in an international experience, students gain essential skills needed to be successful in today’s global workplace. This interdisciplinary program builds confidence and strengthens communication skills as students increase their awareness of the world outside their home environment. Students with international experience have a unique advantage over their competitors for future jobs.
